

A quote from this novel that illustrates your point would be good.

...there is an underlying theme...

move this idea somewhere else

~~In many traditional Chinese novels like A Dream in Red Mansions that all contained one similar element that, in ancient China, there was one thing that is common sense,~~ that is women had a lower social level than men, both in the family and the entire society.

However, ~~with time went by~~ and new ideas came up, the roles for men and women in China has ~~already~~ changed. In China, mostly men and women shared ~~the~~ equal social standards, but sometimes women have ~~the~~ even higher position than men.

modern?
historical? present?
explain what era
you will be discussing

give examples of each of these things.

Expand on this
idea a little bit, with
a shocking
example of some kind to really drive
your point home.

A very interesting idea to explore. I like the literary reference at the start, but use an actual example from that book and maybe another to make your point. Give a couple of examples. Your thesis is stated like a fact, which means that there seems to be no opinion given-- I don't know whether you are saying that the new gender norms are good or bad for society. Also, there is no how or why in your thesis.

Your writing is clear and to the point, now ,really make a statement and support it.

Some of my comments within the essay will only be visible if you click on them. Please ask if you don't know how.